

Water for Life (Samaritan's Purse biosand water filter project)

Customer enters and sits at a café table. Waitress comes to take his order.

Waitress: Are you ready to order?

Customer: It's such a hot day, I'd just like a long, tall glass of water please

Waitress: Still or sparkling?

Customer: Still please

Waitress: Volcanically filtered or spring?

Customer: Um, spring, will be fine thanks...

Waitress: High or low sodium?

Customer: What's best?

Waitress: I prefer low sodium

Customer: OK then

Waitress: Fair trade or free market?

Customer: (getting impatient) fair trade, I suppose!

Waitress: Vitamin enhanced or pure?

Customer: I just want a glass of water!

Waitress: I'll take that as "pure"...regular or large?

Customer: Large! And today if possible!

Waitress: So that's a still, low sodium, fair trade, pure, spring, large water?

Customer: Yes!

Waitress: I'm sorry, we haven't got any of that...

Customer: Well, what have you got?!

Waitress: We've only got bottles of our finest local water

Customer: That will do!

Waitress: Coming right up!

Waitress leaves and comes back with a bottle of brown muddy water which she pours into a glass for the customer

Customer: I can't drink that! Look at it!

Waitress: You asked for water! That's our water!

Customer: Is this what you drink?

Waitress: Yes, it's from our best water supply

Customer: It can't be good for you! Am I really expected to drink this?

Waitress: Oh no, you're expected to order Coca Cola like the other rich visitors do!
